President's Message

By: The Honorable Dino E. Flores, Jr., BAFC President

Welcome to Autumn. I hope everyone got a chance to go the Great Frederick Fair at least once. This year was the 160th anniversary of the Fair. Since I started practicing here in 1995, I don't believe I have ever failed to attend at least once during the week. The rule in our house for the kids was no rides at the Fair; carnivals are for rides. The Fair means walking and seeing animals and exhibits and eating fair food, of course. The Fair is one of many things that makes Frederick County great.

When I was a young lawyer in Montgomery County, Judge Scott Rolle got himself elected as State's Attorney for Frederick County and offered me a job. Every judge and lawyer that I spoke with in Rockville said I would be a fool not to accept the offer. They were right. Frederick County has been a wonderful place to live and raise a family, and particularly, a terrific place to practice law. The collegiality of the Bar and the cohesiveness of the legal community gave me the opportunity to spend my professional life in a place I love surrounded by people who care. I tell anyone who is interested what a great decision I made so long ago.

I also find myself saying, "I remember when" a lot more than I used to. I remember when: there were less than 100 members of the BAFC; we had lunches at the retirement home in the basement of the Pythian Castle (and ate the same food the residents did); we had three Circuit Court and two District Court judges. I don't consider myself old yet, and there are quite a few members who remember much more than that. I'm looking at you, Bill Poffenbarger. But we also have a very active and engaged Young Lawyers Section that gives me confidence this Bar Association will continue to be one of the best in the State for years to come.

Thanks to everyone who came out for the Opening Term of Court. It was an impressive showing but with all the memorial resolutions, it was easy to understand why. Judge Nicklas' official portrait is finally hanging next to Judge Cejka's on the wall between District Courtrooms 2 and 3. If you didn't see it at Opening Term, stop by to check it out the next time you are in the Courthouse.

RECENT EVENTS

Opening Term of Court

On September 12th BAFC members and friends gathered for Opening Term of Court for the first time since February 2020. Memorial Resolutions honoring BAFC members who have passed since the last Opening Term were read. This included Judge Samuel W. Barrick, Harry deMoll, Edward Lulie III, Tom Meachum, Stephen LeRoux, and Frank Goldstein, Family and friends were present and were beyond grateful to those who wrote, read, and gathered to remember their loved one. We also had new BAFC members sign the Lawyer's Book and unveiled Judge Nicklas's official portrait that is now hanging up in the courthouse. It was nice to have this ceremonial event back to "normal" and to see so many familiar faces.

BAFC PRACTITIONERS AT THE BAR- Clarence W. Miles

by: Tom Slater, BAFC Historian

Clarence W. Miles was born in 1897 in Cambridge, Maryland and died in 1977 at age 80. His father was a two-term state legislator from the Eastern Shore of Maryland, who cast one of Maryland's electoral votes for Grover Cleveland in 1892. His uncle, Joshua Miles, was a member of the U.S. Congress, representing Maryland for one term in the 1890s.

From a family of lawyers, Clarence attended the University of Maryland Law School where one of his professors was Albert Ritchie. After law school Miles practiced law in Salisbury, Maryland and tried a case before the state's Public Service Commission. He received a call from his former law professor, Albert Ritchie, who was now the Governor of Maryland, and was asked at the age of 27 to become the People's Counsel for the Public Service Commission. When he resigned after 16 months as People's Counsel, the Baltimore Sun described him as "industrious and energetic, showing purpose and demonstrating ability to protect the public interest." After serving as People's Counsel, Miles commenced the practice of law in Baltimore City, starting the law firm of Miles, Edgett, and Collins and joined with other young lawyers in chartering the University of Baltimore Law School in 1925. In 1932 he formed the law firm Miles and O'Brien. Two Maryland Attorney Generals from Allegany County, William C. Walsh and Thomas B. Finan, eventually joined the firm as well as many other associates and partners. The firm eventually became known as Miles and Stockbridge when, in 1953, the firms of Miles, Walsh, O'Brien, and Morris merged with Mulikin, Stockbridge, and Waters. Over the years Miles & Stockbridge has represented many large and prestigious companies including the Martin Marietta Company, Black and Decker, and the Maryland National Bank, among many others.

At the age of 45, Miles volunteered to serve his country in World War II and became a lieutenant colonel (later colonel) in the U.S. Army, serving in the Judge Advocate General's office. He was called upon to give legal advice regarding the famous General Patton slapping incident and spent much time during the war in North Africa and Europe.

Clarence Miles was active in attempts to reform the Maryland judicial system and, over the years, fought to abolish the Orphans' Court system describing them as "quaint, political survivals rather than judicial units" and "an archaic, costly and inefficient method of administering testamentary matters." He was particularly critical of the fact that, with some exceptions today, Orphans' Court judges were not trained in the law. Mr. Miles served as President of the Maryland State Bar Association in 1953-54.

In 1952, Baltimore voters approved a bond issue to build a new baseball stadium in Baltimore which was to become Memorial Stadium. Clarence Miles and others began looking for a major league team to move to Baltimore to occupy the new stadium. Miles and Baltimore Mayor Thomas J. D'Alesandro, Jr. (Speaker Nancy Pelosi's father) were instrumental in putting together a group of investors that lured the old St. Louis Browns, owned by Bill Veeck, to move to Baltimore. On October 29, 1953, Miles became chairman of the board and president of the new Baltimore Orioles. On opening day in April 1954, Vice President Richard Nixon threw out the first ball re-establishing major league baseball in Baltimore (from 1882 to 1899 Baltimore had a major league team in the American Association and later the National League before relocation to New York City and eventually becoming the team that became the New York Yankees.) Clarence Miles resigned as president of the Baltimore Orioles after two years amid speculation that he was going to run for the U.S. Senate.

When efforts were made in the 1950s to do something to reinvigorate Baltimore City's economy and struggling economic vitality, a group of young business leaders led by Jim Rouse formed the Greater Baltimore Committee and chose Clarence Miles to be the first chairman of the Committee. The Committee became an important champion for the revitalization of Baltimore, including the completion of the Jones Falls Expressway, the building of a new civic center, the development of a master transportation plan as well as efforts at harbor development, air and water pollution abatement, and slum clearance. Miles was also instrumental in the formation of the Center Club in Baltimore in 1962, which was an important development in that it was the first private, influential club in Baltimore that did not have restricted membership. Miles served as its first president. In 1963, Governor Millard J. Tawes appointed Clarence Miles to head the Cambridge Coalition Committee to resolve civil rights protests in Cambridge, Maryland. Also in 1963, Miles and New York's Steuben Glass Company President Arthur A. Houghton, Jr. formed the Wye

Institute in 1963, a non-profit designed to “help to guide the economic, cultural and educational growth of the once-isolated Eastern Shore.”

Politically, Clarence Miles became involved with the Progressive Democratic League, which became the Maryland Democratic League, a faction of the Maryland Democratic Party. He attended the 1912 Democratic National Convention when he was 15 years old and his father was a delegate to the convention. He also attended the 1932 Democratic convention when Maryland Governor Ritchie was a contender for the presidential nomination. He was a close associate of Herbert O’Conor, a law school classmate, who was elected Governor of Maryland and a U.S. Senator.

Miles temporarily broke from the Democratic Party in 1952 when he supported General Dwight Eisenhower for President. He was an often forgotten candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor of Maryland in 1966 at age 68. His campaign slogan was “Maryland Ahead By Miles.” He campaigned on a relatively progressive platform but, unfortunately for Miles, he finished fourth behind paving contractor George P. Mahoney, Maryland Attorney General Thomas B. Finan, and Congressman Carlton Sickles, carrying only Queen Anne’s County where he lived. Republican Spiro T. Agnew won the general election with much Democratic support, including Clarence Miles, due to the racist “Your Home is Your Castle: Protect It” campaign of George P. Mahoney. Miles said of Mahoney: “Any candidate who sought victory by a route chartered to inflame racial prejudice was not fit to be governor.” (quote from Spiro Agnew And The Rise Of The American Right by Justin P. Coffey published in 2015.)

Of interest is the fact that Clarence Miles and his wife became great friends with the Duke and Duchess of Windsor who often visited with them in Maryland and in Europe. When Clarence Miles died in October 1977, the Baltimore Sun described him as “an urbane man who never forgot the value of good common sense. And he applied both traits with rich results for the city and the state.”

While not a Frederick County attorney, Clarence Miles was an important practitioner of the bar, and the firm that bears his name has been a vital force in the legal community of Frederick since 1987. Note that much of the account of Miles’s life and career does not discuss his legal practice, which shows that many lawyers touch and impact the communities they live in by their commitment to the public good and public service. This certainly has been true of Frederick County lawyers.

The primary source for this account was Eight Busy Decades: The Life & Times of Clarence W. Miles – A Memoir Edited by Jacques Kelly published in 1986 and the Miles & Stockbridge Firm History.
